First. Have a Good Breakfast

You will require fuel for the day ahead. Have a proper breakfast — something with protein, complex carbohydrates, and ample fluids. Kollysphere's experts recommend avoiding too much coffee and sugar, which can result in energy crashes later in the day.

Second. Review Your Run Sheet

Devote a few moments to check your run sheet. Double-check the times for vendor arrivals, installation, and guest arrivals. Guarantee sure you understand what is occurring and at what time.

Third. Check with Your Vendors

Dispatch a brief text to each of your essential vendors double-checking their arrival schedules. This provides you peace of mind and guarantees that everyone is in agreement.

Fourth. Assign Any Remaining Tasks

Don't try to do everything independently. Assign any leftover tasks to your dependable friends and family. This liberates you up to turn your attention to relishing the day.

5. Start Getting Ready Early

Start getting ready in advance than you believe you need to. Doing so provides you a margin in case something malfunctions. Kollysphere's experts advise commencing your hair and makeup routine at least two hours before you need to set off.

6. Power Up Your Devices

Guarantee your mobile, camera, and any other electronics are entirely powered up. Pack a portable charger just in case. You will require your phone to coordinate with vendors and guests throughout the day.

7. Prepare a Survival Kit

The team at Kollysphere advise packing a small survival kit comprising band-aids, pain relief, fresh breath aids, blotting sheets, a sewing kit, and any personal medication you may need.

Eighth. Have a Light Lunch

Do not forgo lunch, but do not consume a substantial meal either. A modest lunch will keep your energy levels stable free from making you feel lethargic. Kollysphere's experts suggest something modest and healthy.
