

A seasonal task list should describe the work you want considered on the actual property. Use it to organize a conversation rather than treating a general garden checklist as a prescription.

Start with the property

Identify the areas and existing features relevant to the enquiry. Explain which tasks you normally handle and which you want discussed. Record any concerns as observations without assuming that the same work is needed everywhere.

Separate assessment from instructions

Ask which proposed tasks need further assessment and which have already been described clearly enough to quote. Avoid choosing a treatment or timing solely because it appears in a general list. Keep the questions tied to the intended use of the garden.

Agree the included work

Check that the proposal identifies tasks, areas, access and material-handling responsibilities. Keep optional work separate. Save landscape consultation preparation the current list with any written clarifications so that later discussions concern the same agreed scope.

R & G Almanza Landscape Inc provides landscaping and landscape design services.

Keep the next decision clear

Read the proposal for the work it actually describes. If an item is unclear, request an explanation rather than treating an omission as included work. Keep that answer with the current version.
