Each case consists of a predefined set of products, and the odds of obtaining a specific rarity are usually divulged by the video game developer. When a player "opens" a case, the RNG picks a rarity tier initially, then chooses a particular item within that tier. The result is delivered immediately, often accompanied by visual and audio effects that increase the sense of anticipation.

Since the odds are typically low for the most valuable products, the anticipated value of a single case opening is generally lower than its purchase rate. This develops an inherent risk: players might receive products worth far less than the expense of the case, or they might strike a rare "jackpot" that goes beyond expectations.

Online markets, community trading online forums, and auction platforms enable gamers to sell their jackpots genuine currency or in-game credits.

Players who deal with case opening purely as a financial investment needs to stay informed about market trends and understand that the value of an item can drop dramatically after a brand-new case or update is presented.
