Ask anyone who has had roofing work done what worried them most, and the answer is rarely the ladder or the weather. It's the price, and whether the figure on the quote will still be the figure at the end. Redland Roofing Cardiff, a family-owned business run by John Owen, has built its reputation on keeping that part simple. The company's own promise is no games and no hidden costs, and it's a big reason customers across Cardiff keep recommending John and his team. Every job starts with a free, no-obligation quote and an honest assessment of the roof. John gets up and looks at the actual problem, whether it's slipped slates on a terrace in Splott, a tired felt garage roof in Cyncoed or a leaking flat roof over a kitchen in Cathays. He then explains what he's found in plain language and sends photos so you can see it rather than take his word for it. That matters, because most people can't get up on their own roof to check. You get a clear price for the work that's needed, and nothing you don't need is added to pad it out. Customers on Google come back to the same point again and again: the quoted price was the final price. One customer compared quotes from eight to ten roofers in Cardiff before choosing Redland, and competitive quotes are one of the recurring themes in the reviews. One landlord living more than 250 miles away received photos throughout the job, which meant they could approve the work and see it completed without making the trip. Before-and-after photos and videos are a regular part of how the team works, for customers down the road in Penylan and those on the other side of the country alike.
